The PCF has partnered with the BBC to create Your Paintings, a unique website showcasing the entire collection of publicly owned oil paintings across the United Kingdom. Your Paintings Tagger, a pioneering crowd-sourcing exercise, will enable Your Paintings to be fully searchable.

The PCF was launched in 2003. It is a registered charity and is based in London. It has a network of researchers and photographers working across the country from the Channel Islands to Northern Ireland working on the digitisation of the nation's paintings across the UK.

The Public Catalogue Foundation (PCF) has completed a 10-year project to digitise and make accessible online the UK's entire collection of publicly-owned oil paintings. The paintings are now available on the Your Paintings website for free alongside BBC TV documentary archive and biographical information for selected artists.

The project received £100,000 from Grants for the arts and Renaissance support, as well as funding from a number of other sources. No other country has put its entire oil painting collection online.

Background

The UK's national oil painting collection includes some 211,861 paintings across the UK. This collection encompasses paintings not only held by museums but also works in universities, town councils, hospitals and even paintings held in police stations, fire stations and a lighthouse. It also includes the Arts Council Collection.
