

BBC's Wolf Hall costumes to go on display at Gainsborough Old Hall

Fans of the critically acclaimed BBC drama Wolf Hall will be able to get up close and personal with the costumes of the show as the clothing will be on display at Gainsborough Old Hall in the summer of 2017.

The Tudor costumes will be in Lincolnshire from 29 April 2017 through until the August bank holiday, promising a treat for fans of drama, history and fashion. The costumes will be lent to Gainsborough Old Hall courtesy of Angels Costumes.

Jon Hogan, public engagement manager, said:

“Henry VIII himself stayed at Gainsborough Old Hall with his fifth wife Catherine Howard in 1541, making it the perfect setting to see these magnificent Tudor costumes.”

“Wolf Hall was celebrated by critics for its historical accuracy, and the costumes are a brilliant example. They’re impressive replicas of the clothes we know were worn by Henry VIII and his courtiers.”

The historical smash hit was shown on BBC Two in January 2015, telling the story of Thomas Cromwell’s rise to fame in the court of Henry VIII.

More information about Gainsborough Old Hall’s 2017 events is coming soon. Stay up to date at www.gainsborougholdhall.com.